A surprise birthday party had been planned for many months by the Morgan kin.

Harry was turning 70, and his family was eager to rub it in.

Harry's son John got the birthday boy out of the house with a made-up story.

Harry's wife Estelle waved goodbye to them and soon was in her glory.

It was time to decorate with 2 rolls of streamers and a shiny gold centerpiece,

Along with a confetti popper and 2 party hats—brought by Harry's niece.

Grandson James brought with him 3 noisemakers and 2 cans of Goofy String.

Aunt Flo had 3 bows on her head and said she was the best gift she could bring.

Daughter Mabel set the table with 7 straws, 7 forks, and 2 ice cream scoopers.

She added 3 bottles of bubbles to ensure there were no party poopers.

A pack of birthday candles and lighter were found, and 2 cards were signed by all.

3 birthday plates, 4 juice boxes, ice cream, and 6 cupcakes completed the haul.

John came home without his dad—he'd lost him at the nearby Home Depot.

"My word!" exclaimed Estelle. "Where in the world did he go?"

Then in came Harry with a grin on his face as he yelled out, "Surprise!"

"Don't you know, dear family, you can't pull the wool over this guy's eyes."
